1. Accurately interpreting TEMPO NO₂ observations requires a priori profiles at both high spatial and high temporal resolution.

2. NO₂ a priori profiles are typically generated using a computationally expensive chemistry transport model. Here we propose using machine learning on a high-resolution meteorological forecast/analysis and an emissions inventory.

3. Machine learning is a computationally efficient method, and the predictions yield a good agreement.